SprutCam 7 crack / license / Serial number

H.P. - Customer Service March 29, 2020 I have an HTC Vive wireless headset which is working fine. I was then doing some playing around with SprutCAM 7 and so far so good. The headsets surround in my first VR experience made me want to check more games and look more closely at the environment surrounding me. I have a Razer Hydra 2 for precision controllers and it worked perfectly with the headset I was using to play the game. Until recently, I have been playing around with the Devcam and have discovered a few glitches. I can not get the "Don't remove cover" option to work. What this option does is when you go back to its' menu with the space bar, it will have it resume the game automatically without the user intervention. However, in order to access its' menu, you will first need to remove the headset cover. The Devcam does not have any other way of letting users know this. The other issue is that when I plug in my controller, the Devcam will auto scroll to center. However, when I unplug the controller, the Devcam will not take it back into its' auto scroll to center feature. I was wondering if this is something I should not encounter with the Devcam. Or if I am somehow ignoring a step and the Devcam is not installing correctly with the controller to properly do some of the code processing. I know with the new firmware update in July 2019, HP added extended memory support to SprutCAM. Do you have any idea if this problem would be resolved with the firmware update? I wanted to play around a bit more with the controller. Thanks for any input on this issue! Sylvain TST Sept 8, 2019 I have a very minor problem with the Devcam. I keep getting a dialog box on the Devcam that says "Headset Installation Required" "Plug in the headset you want to use. It will wait for you to remove it from the equipment or to confirm that you wish to remove it. Next, the Devcam will scroll back to the home screen automatically." When I do nothing, the Devcam does what it should. However, I have no desire to remove the headset. If this dialog box will not go away then I will ignore it, but it is kind of driving me nuts. Is there any way to tell the Devcam to go back
